

As pioneers of the Nova Scotia wilderness in 1816, the Ross family faces many hardships and trials when Captain William Ross, under the direction of Lord Dalhousie, leads one hundred and seventy-two disbanded soldiers and their families into the Nova Scotia wilderness to settle the new community known as New Ross, Nova Scotia, today. By 1822, Little Mary, the Ross's only daughter, grows into a stunning young woman. But when Andrew Keins finally proposes to her, Mary soon finds herself on the way to Ireland to buy lace for her wedding gown—only to find shipboard romance that may well alter the course of her life. Whatever decision she makes, she knows someone's heart is going to be broken. Based on actual diaries and government records stored at the Ross Farm Living Museum—Rose Bank Cottage
